For example, I have this array: a = ["id","name","type","status"] And then, if I'm in an event context, I need to get the id of the element where the event is, like this: event.get_node_by_css("div[@id='"+ a[0][0] + "']").get_attribute('id') How can I get the id attribute of the first element of the array? A: If you're always going to get the element type with the id then this would work: event.get_node_by_css("div[@id='"+a[0]+'"][@id]");get_attribute('id') Incase you want to get the id with the event. event.get_node_by_css("div[@id='"+a[0]+'"][@id]");get_attribute('id').encode('utf-8') The Y Combinator startup threads of the site - d0p3r ===== xuki There's already a thread about it in HN: ----- d0p3r Some additional hints: The design of the boards is based on the concept of threads: (please note that '

And here is another from my collection: . It will detect the PC at first run and ask you if you want to add or edit a network location: . After running you will be prompted to select a directory for the Logs that will be saved: . On my Windows 7 system I then specified a directory on my desktop. . And finally I set up the Logging: . . Logging works as advertised, with the Logs being saved and can be opened in Notepad or any other text editor program. . It is all very well but it has one weakness. . . The problem is that the Logging cannot co-exist with other software. For example, Notepad is an essential part of Windows and is installed with every copy of Windows and cannot easily be removed. . . So it would not be a problem if the Logging program was as intelligent as this: . . . In this instance the Logs were just saving to the desktop from where they were opened. . . If the Logs were to be saved to a network directory they would have been saved to the network drive from where they were opened. . . The programmers or distributors of this software have not made it easy for users to copy a log to a directory on a network drive. . . So I think I will write the software that makes it easy for users to do this. . . Hoping this is of some assistance to anyone who wants to do this: . . A last thought to this software: . . Those who just want to look at the logs can download this:Q: How to draw a full "3D Graph" in Excel with R code? This is my data.
